When are you entitled to lodge an application for internal review?

You are entitled to an internal review if you have lodged an application under the Right to Information Act 2009 and the QBCC:

- has refused to give you full or part access to a document
- has refused to amend a personal document
- has refused to deal with your application
- has granted access subject to an access charge that you feel is not applicable.

You are also entitled to an internal review if another person has made an RTI application and the QBCC obtained your view, but the decision is not in accordance with your view.

When aren't you entitled to lodge an application for internal review?

You are not entitled to an internal review of a decision made:

- as a result of a previous internal review application
- by the Commissioner of the QBCC.

Do you have to pay for this?

There is no application fee for an application for internal review.

How long will it take to process my application?

A decision on your application will be made within 20 business days of receipt by the QBCC.

What if I am still dissatisfied with the decision?

If you are dissatisfied with the internal review decision, you may request an external review by the Information Commissioner. This application must be made in writing, specifying an Australian return address, to:
