- Two tests have been commissioned for the Princess Alexandra Hospital's wall cladding.
- The initial test will test for combustibility of the product. The second test involves the construction of a façade that will test the resilience of the building system.
- The initial combustibility test will be undertaken by the University of Queensland and is scheduled to be completed by 14 July 2017.
- The façade test will be undertaken by Warrington Exova. Exova advise that results for this test will take 6-7 weeks.

- The consultant Fire Engineer has reviewed the Princess Alexandra Hospital construction documentation, and will conduct an on-site invasive inspection commencing 26 July 2017. The engineer will then be in a position to advise Exova with the construction methods required for the façade wall to enable testing. Depending on the engineering review more than one test may be required.

Non-Conforming Building Products

- Exova has received the PA Hospital façade panelling and confirmed that there is a priority placement in their scheduling for this testing.
- The wall façade will take in the order of 6 days to erect and this will be based on the different type of wall configuration as it appears at the PA Hospital.
- The Engineers have been requested to commence an option study to remediate the PA should the results from façade testing indicate the need.
- The final report has been received by the Audit Taskforce for the Initial Product Test on PA Hospital panels conducted by the University of Queensland has confirmed combustibility.
- Queensland Health has been briefed on these results and have put in place interim arrangements to ensure occupant safety at the hospital and has also disseminated communication to their hospitals, outlining risk mitigation strategies and measures.
- QFES has reviewed the final report and advise the following:
 - The core material was tested for combustibility by exposing 100mm x 100mm material samples, one at a time, to conditions likely to be present in a fire.
 - The test results demonstrate that the core material is combustible (ignites and sustains flaming) when exposed to conditions likely to be present in a fire.
 - Sch. 3(10)(1)(h)
 - The test was about the material, therefore further testing (i.e. AS 5113 - 'the scaled façade test') is needed to evaluate the fire hazard this presents to the building.
