

Building Services Authority

MEDIA RELEASE

6 August 2009

The best time to build in Queensland is...NOW!

Despite the economic doom and gloom, there has never been a better time for renovating or building a new home in Queensland.

And the Building Services Authority (BSA) is coming to Warwick to present a FREE seminar on how to go about your building project.

The seminar called "Smart Building and Renovating" will be held at the Jackie Howe Motel on Wednesday 12 August at 6.30pm.

The seminar will guide homeowners through the building and renovating process, from financing your project and choosing a contractor, to getting a written contract for the work and maintaining the work after completion.

Industry experts will explain how to go about common renovations like bathrooms, kitchens and laundries, and give homeowners an idea of who to go to for advice on new construction, alterations and additions.

BSA general manager Ian Jennings said because of the economic downturn, building contractors are more likely to be available to start work ASAP, and can offer more competitive rates for homeowners.

"And people lucky enough to live in Queensland benefit from the best-regulated building industry in Australia.

"Licensed Queensland contractors have proved they have the technical skills and financial security to meet BSA's vigorous licensing criteria.

"Homeowners engaging a licensed contractor to do building work are also protected by the statutory Queensland Home Warranty Scheme insurance, which protects them against defects, subsidence and incomplete work.

Mr Jennings said for all these reasons, there has never been a better time to build or renovate in Queensland.

"This BSA seminar is the best place to start if you are looking to improve your most valuable asset and take advantage of these times."
